

Is Your Electric Bill on the Rise?

Have you noticed a spike in your electric bill, with no obvious culprit? Drafty windows could be contributing to this increase in cost. The lifespan of a window is approximately 15-20 years. If you think your windows may be this old, then we encourage you to do a simple self-check of your windows for some signs they may need to be replaced.

Starting with the obvious:

1. Are there visible cracks in your windows? If so, there is likely a draft penetrating your window.
2. Is condensation forming on the inside of your windows? If so, the window seals could be failing and you have outside air getting in and inside air getting out.
3. Are there any signs of water leakage? If so, you need to get this issue resolved sooner than later.

These issues — if left ignored — could lead to mold, mildew, and even rot. Windows are vital to your home's overall integrity, so don't wait until it's too late.

SIDING UPKEEP

Tired of the grungy, dirty, and discolored siding on your home? The reason your siding is turning green in areas is due to excessive moisture. The staining could be a variety of things including algae, mold, mildew, fungus or more as dark, moist places are ideal for this type of growth. Trimming trees and shrubs allowing more direct sunlight to your siding can also help prevent staining caused by fungal growth.

While new siding is always an option, often times a simple solution is to just wipe the siding's surface with a simple dish soap and warm water solution as it won't wear away at the siding's protective coating.

If the siding needs a deeper clean you can lightly scrub the siding using simple green or a comparable product found online or your nearest home improvement center. Be cautious of using any kind of bleach or acetone product as they can ruin your siding color and protective coating.

When it comes to aluminum siding it can be repainted but should be cleaned first and lightly washed to not cause dents or creasing in aluminum.
